Attitudes toward the West | Caucasus Analytical Dig

Following an article on Georgians' attitudes toward Russia, CRRC fellows Therese Svensson and Julia Hon have written a new piece for CAD, entitled "Attitudes toward the West in the South Caucasus". Their article looks at citizen's views on three areas of relations - political, economic and cultural - between the South Caucasus and the West, in particular NATO, the US and the EU. Read more

The Public's View of Constitutional Reform in Georgia

The 2010 Georgian Constitutional Reform in the Eyes of the Public report is now available. As a product of the study commissioned by the Netherlands Institute for Multiparty Democracy (NIMD) and carried out by CRRC-Georgia, it presents the results of the opinion survey on constitutional and governance processes and their development in Georgia. Presentation of Corruption Survey Results in Armenia

Armenia under the program of USAID Mobilizing Actions against Corruption (MAAC) has conducted surveys throughout Armenia among households and private enterprises about Corruption in the Republic of Armenia. The surveys were conducted among 1515 randomly selected adult people (at the age of 18 and older) in October of 2009 and 400 private enterprises in January 2010. Read more

What Makes Georgian's Happy? Results from World Value Survey

What makes Georgians satisfied with life? Religion, education, one's financial situation, and levels of happiness are often assumed to be crucial in determining a person's overall level of life satisfaction. Results yielded from the World Values Survey (WVS) reveal that religion does indeed play an important role vis-à-vis life satisfaction while levels of education, financial situations, and levels of individual happiness, do so as well, but to a lesser extent.
